

PhD Network group Religious Studies

On Monday 28 September, the PhD Network group 'Religious Studies' gathered in Utrecht. The central focus of the meeting was the reading and discussion of an article written by one of our members Léon van Gulik titled 'The Politics of Imagination', in which he explores the role and meaning of the imagination in Wiccan practice. The text proved a very fruitful source for discussions on ethnographic methodology, the structure of an academic argument, and the possible signification of 'imagination' in our different lines of research. After almost two hours of discussion, the session was closed with drinks at café 't Gras van de Buren.
